brilliant blasting

A fabulously decorative finish that can be applied to the surface of CaesarStone is sandblasting, whereby a pattern is etched into the surface of the stone.

The sandblasting technique is made possible by CaesarStone's immense strength created from 97 per cent quartz, pigments and polymers. A fine stream of water which also contains abrasive powder is blasted at the material at high pressure, allowing it to either etch the surface or completely cut through the quartz.

Highly effective, these patterned slabs can be used as feature walls, counters or petitions in commercial or residential design. The process is highly controlled and run off computer design, creating endless applications for architects and designers.

The sandblasted surface maintains its original CaesarStone properties: highly resistant to scratching, staining and heat, and requiring little maintenance.
